Roman Senchin : Minus (New Russian Writing) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Minus (New Russian Writing):

Uprooted by the collapse of the USSR, some disillusioned young men take to drink and drugs. In contrast, their parents are depicted as survivors against all odds, although that means abandoning their professions and growing their own food. Roman Senchin provides almost photographic portrayals and abundant ethnographic details you won't find in guidebooks.

About the Author Roman Senchin, born in 1971, grew up in Siberia and only very recently moved to Moscow. He is one of the most talented and expressive spokesmen for his generation and a leader of the so-called New Realism. He has five novels and many short stories to his name and has won several prestigious literary prizes. His work has been translated into German, French and other languages. Minus was published in Germany by DuMont to very good reviews.
